ANTI -RAGGING REPORT

The Department of Agriculture successfully organized an Anti-Ragging Campaign from August 12th to 18th, 2025. The campaign was dedicated to spread awareness about the negative impacts of ragging while encouraging values of respect, cooperation, and friendship among students. Throughout the week, several interactive activities were organized, ensuring active participation of both students and faculty members in creating a safe, inclusive, and supportive campus atmosphere.

- The pledge activity during Anti-Ragging Week in the Agriculture department became a cornerstone of the campaign, promote a sense of unity and responsibility among all participants. Faculty members and students assembled to take the anti-ragging pledge, reciting affirmations that highlighted their determination to build a safe and friendly campus culture. The ceremony underscored that everyone, regardless of year or role, is integral to protecting individual dignity and promoting mutual respect. Participants promised not only to refrain from ragging but also to actively discourage and report any such incidents they might witness. This created a supportive environment, encouraging vigilance and cooperation against negative behaviors. The pledge activity concluded with participants reflecting on the universal values of empathy, compassion, and camaraderie. These values were projected as guiding principles for student life, ensuring that the message of zero tolerance towards ragging resonates throughout the academic year. Certificates of participation or pledge cards were distributed, serving as tangible reminders of each individual's responsibility in sustaining a ragging-free environment. Displays in prominent locations helped reinforce the commitment made during the week, continually inspiring students.

- The essay writing competition held during Anti-Ragging Week in the Agriculture department played a vital role in deepening students' awareness and commitment to a ragging-free campus. This activity encouraged students not only to reflect on the negative impacts of ragging but also to critically analyze the social and ethical responsibilities of individuals within the academic community. Participants explored how ragging undermines trust and harmony, affecting both victims and bystanders. Through structured writing, students strengthened their ability to communicate complex ideas and sensitive issues effectively. The competition helped foster empathy by allowing writers to express genuine concern and propose actionable steps for preventing ragging. Outstanding essays were acknowledged through awards and certificates, motivating students to engage more actively in advocacy against ragging. These recognitions also highlighted the importance of student voice in shaping a respectful and supportive campus culture. Beyond the competition, the essays contributed to ongoing conversations about student welfare and safety.

- During the Anti-Ragging Week, awareness lectures were delivered by student representatives from the Agriculture department, focusing on the critical issues surrounding ragging and promoting a culture of respect and inclusion. These sessions addressed the legal, ethical, and social consequences of ragging, highlighting its severe impact on both individuals and the campus environment. Through interactive presentations, students emphasized the department's stance of zero tolerance towards any form of ragging or harassment. Student speakers supplemented their lectures with real-life examples and personal stories, making the sessions relatable and impactful. Open discussions encouraged peers to ask questions, clear doubts, and understand the importance of maintaining dignity and safety within the department. The lectures concluded with widespread agreement among students to uphold the values of respect, empathy, and unity. The event successfully fostered a sense of responsibility and strengthened the department's commitment to sustaining a safe, welcoming, and inclusive academic atmosphere.
